KRUTTSCHNITT AND HEADS OF UNIONS STAND FIRM.

Harriman Lines Official Refuses to Con sider Recognition of Shopmen's Federation and Says Other Demands Are East. Out of the Question - May Meet Again.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 1.- The first conference to-day between the Harriman system officials and five presidents of unions forming the Federation of Shop Employees was without result. After several hours conference no agreement could be reached. The deadlock was over recognition of the federation, which the union leaders a T demand as a necessary preliminary to any negotiations.

Vice-President Kruttschnitt, as he has declared from the outset he would do, refused to yield. After three hours discussion the conference ended without Kruttschnitt and the other railroad officials reproached the men for disturbing the harmonious relations of the road and its men at a time when the latter are admittedly receiving higher wages than on other railways. The chiefs of the Harriman lines took the position that recognition of the federation means the introduction of the principle of the sympathetic strike on the system, with conputes on remote parts of the system. As to the specific demands for higher wages and new rules of shop management, it was contended that they were entirely out of the question and would if granted damage. Mr. Bowles estimated his loss

The priest was alone at the time when the men demanded money to get someand asked them to leave, but they refused to go until they got more.

"Give us your money, or we'll murder Mr. Loomis has a pair of motor goggles you and burn the house," declared Frank and a dust coat for the dog. Fitted out Hughes, flourishing a large piece of lead in this regalia and perched on the front effort to parley with his assailants.

"I have no money, gentlemen," he said. "Kindly leave." Despite his pleadings the money hidden about the house and they set out to find it. After making a thorough search which availed nothing they returned to the kitchen and piling paper near a table set fire to it and tried to escape. The priest, his forebearance exhausted, leaped upon the men and hurled them across the floor. Then securing the key to the back door he ran out of the house before the astonished men could rise to their feet more Married Last March. BALTIMORE, Sept. 1 .- To the great surprise of their many friends in Baltimore and New York, Vyva, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Cole of 1811 Barclay street, and William H. Kaiser, son of Charles Kaiser of New York, have announced that they were married on March 26 last. Miss Cole about that time left Baltimore to visit relatives in New York. She returned about the first of April, but gave no hint that she had been married.

The couple had originally planned to seep their wedding a secret for three years, but the frequent visits of the bridegroom to this city aroused his mother's suspicions and she asked him f he was not married. True to the pact Mr. Kaiser had made with his bride to keep the matter secret, he denied that he was married, but his mother was so persistent he had to tell her. Miss Cole then broke the news to her parents and received their blessing.

NEW BEATTIE CASE WITNESS

TERIOUS JOY RIDER.

Attorney Smith Gets a Note in Court. Then Goes to Call "a Very Important Witness" by Telephone-Hinted That Second Man Was in the Beattle Auto.

CHESTERFIELD COURT HOUSE, Va., Sept. -At the morning session of the Beattle case to-day Harry Smith, one of Beattie's lawyers, got the court's permission to go to the telephone to communicate with a very important witness." Then it became known that Beattie's lawyers have found a man who was automobiling on the Midlothian turnpike on the night of the murder in the company of a woman. This man is said to have been seen cranking his machine at a spot not far from that at which Mrs. Beattle was murdered.

Several young men who were on a lark on the night of July 18 and who returned along the turnpike about the hour that the homicide took place have testified for the prosecution that in the vicinity afterward established as that where the murder occurred they saw a machine closely resembling Henry Beattie's: that a woman was standing on the left running board when they passed and that a man was by the hood of the automobile tinkering with the engine. The prosecution has shown by inference that the young Richmond joy riders saw Henry Beattie standing by the hood of his machine while his wife was on the running board.

Through the newly discovered witness the defence will attempt to prove that it was not Beattie and his wife that the other automobiling party saw, but this witness and the woman who was his com-

It also became known to-day that should this witness be forced to take the stand for the defence harm to Beattle's case might come through the Commonwealth's ross-examination. In the first place the witness has reasons for not wanting to be brought into the case. Only vigorous efforts by Beattie's lawyers have uncovered his name and knowledge of the facts he is said to possess It is said that should he be asked he would testify that he had passed Beattie in his automobile, had recognized Beattie and that he had seen a woman and another man in the car besides Beattle himself. No hint of the second man in the machine with Beattie and his wife has been whispered. Beattie has declared that he rode alone with his wife and that she was shot by a pedestrian from the roadside Smith was examining a witness shortly before the noon recess when a court at-tendant laid a folded yellow slip of telegraph paper on Smith's deek. Smith the paper and read it. Henry Beattle looked over his shoulder and read the note also. Immediately he showed unusual excitement. He turned quickly to his father and whispered in his ear, then he pulled the heads of his two lawyers over to him and whispered eagerly to them. After several minutes consultation among the four Smith rose and asked the court's permission to retire

After a half hour's absence he handed a name to the assistant clerk of the court and said he wanted a peremptory summons served.

"There's only one of that name in Richf" mond," said Smith aloud. "You won't have any trouble finding him.

The afternoon passed and the mysterious witness did not appear. Neither of Beattie's lawyers would say a word about the unknown witness and what his evihimself who revealed half of what is known about him to some of the newspaper men: the rest of the information was gathered

The most important feature of the case to-day, so far as it was heard by the jury, was the admission of Douglas Beattie. brother of the prisoner, when he said under cross-examination that had he known that the charge of murder was to be made against his brother Henry following the Coroner's inquest he would have destroyed all the evidence possible to be used against Henry. Not only did. Douglas Beattie blurt out his admission, but he made other equally prejudicial statements, though it was evident that Douglas Beattie was doing his best to be a favorable witness. Prosecutor Wendenburg asked Douglas why he had ordered the front seat cushions of Henry's machine washed on the day following the homicide. The witness replied that it was because they were all bloodstained.

The Prosecutor wanted to know why he had ordered the left hand seat cushion to be washed and not the right. "If I had had time to wash the other seat out it would have been done," Douglas answered. "The whole darned machine would have been washed." "Suppose you had known that the machine would be seized by the authorities, would you then have had it washed?" Wendenburg queried. "Yes, and if I had known what was going to happen I would not have taken all those detectives in the machine out to the blood spot on the turnpike. Mr.

tion, would not have had the opportunity of placing the machine over the blood spot or doing anything else like that." "Would it have been right for you as a citizen or as a brother to have destroyed evidence where a crime of this kind had been committed?" the Commonwealth's attorney asked. "If it meant that the evidence was to be used against my brother, yes," the witness answered. "I would not hesitate to do anything of that sort. What man would not help to save his brother? Had I known what I have learned since I would have destroyed that evidence "Did you know of your brother Henry's relations with Beulah Binford?" asked Wendenburg, taking another tack.

"Yes. I knew when she came back to Richmond too. Harry came to me and said: 'Do you know that damned girl is back again? "Did everybody in South Richmond
